Fashion Against AIDS Collection at H&M

Shot in Montréal at

www.entrepotsdominion.ca

Dancer Simon Vermeulen graces the cover of this month's special 10th Anniversary issue with an intersecting set of causes and themes. Besides wearing the fun, spring stylings of the leggings, tops, and harem shorts from H&M's Fashion Against AIDS Collection, Vermeulen is working on his own meaningful upcoming project, Der Untermensch.

Currently in the financing phase, Vermeulen's contemporary dance film project will depict "the treatment of homosexuals during World War II, making a parallel between concentration camps and how physically constrained we can feel when expression is repressed." Trained in ballet and contemporary dance, Vermeulen's choreography will symbolize the "imprisonment, escape and rebirth of those then considered under-men."

It's a stark contrast to the bright colours and joyful vibe of this shoot with young Montréal up-and-coming fashion photographer Cody Caissie. The two took over the main room of the magnificent multi-purpose event space Entrepôts Dominion (3968 St-Ambroise) for a fusion of fashion shoot, dance document, and in situ performance.

H&M gives 25% of all sales from their Fashion Against AIDS Collection to a cluster of foundations including the UN Population Fund, Washington-based YouthAIDS, and the MTV Staying Alive Foundation.
